

Stalin on Communists Needing to Combat Harmful National Institutions

Nations... have a right to preserve any of their national institutions, whether beneficial or harmful – nobody can... forcibly interfere in the life of a nation.

But that does not mean that Social-Democracy will not combat and agitate against the harmful institutions of nations and against the inexpedient demands of nations.

“Nations have a right to arrange their affairs as they please; they have a right to preserve any of their national institutions, whether beneficial or harmful – nobody can (nobody has a right to!) forcibly interfere in the life of a nation. But that does not mean that Social-Democracy will not combat and agitate against the harmful institutions of nations and against the inexpedient demands of nations.”
